I stand on this floor the daughter of refugee from Poland. He came here with nothing. He came here with no literacy skills, and a generation later, I'm here in front of you because my father had the opportunity to learn to read, the opportunity to pursue the American dream.

We are talking about the most fundamental of things we need to function in our society - literacy. If we want Americans to dream, we have to give them the skills so that they may imagine a future for them... See More
